

book of the week

Carmen Rita Wong
Why Didn't You Tell Me?

MEMOIR

Former CNBC host Wong grew up trying to navigate three confusing realities: the Latina world of her volatile mom, the immigrant Chinese one of her hustler dad and the white-picket-fence suburbs of her mother's next husband. But it wasn't until decades later, when her mother died, that Wong unearthed shattering secrets about whose daughter she really is, upending her identity once again. A stunner about race, culture and the deeper meaning of family.

The Best New Books

A memoir about secrets and belonging and two smart mysteries to keep you guessing

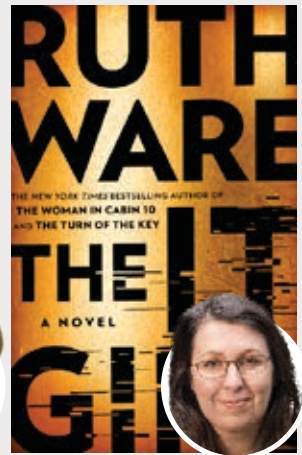

Edited by KIM HUBBARD

Barbara Graham
What Jonah Knew

NOVEL

How does 7-year-old Jonah, who's always cried for his "other" mother, know details of the life of Henry Bird, a musician who vanished years ago? And does Jonah hold the clue to Henry's disappearance? This riveting psychological thriller raises provocative questions about life and death.

Ruth Ware
The It Girl

MYSTERY

Freshman year at Oxford was going great—until Hannah found her roommate dead. When the man she helped convict dies in jail 10 years later, lingering doubts drive her back to the world she fled. So many flawed friendships, so many promising red herrings. . . . The pages just turn themselves.

New in Paperback

Laura Lippman
Dream Girl
A novelist recuperating from a fall is plagued by mysterious calls—from a woman claiming to be the protagonist of his most successful novel.

Zakiya Dalila Harris
The Other Black Girl
Two young Black women try to navigate the nerve-shredding New York City publishing world in this sly, suspenseful debut.

Alex Michaelides
The Maidens
Therapist Mariana becomes convinced that professor Edward Fosca is a killer in this tour de force of mythology and murder.

Self-Help Pick!

Sophia Nelson
Be the One You Need
From the author of The Woman Code, an inspirational memoir focused on the importance of (metaphorically) putting on your own oxygen mask before helping others with theirs.

